Today on KMOX radio, I heard the following news story, worded something like this, "today the Mayor of St. Louis, Mayor Slay, proposed a marriage between St. Louis City and St. Louis County." I could not have been more shocked. Now this is a very complicated issue that I don't want to try to unravel here in this blog, but I'd like to make two points... 1. Most people would agree that the separation between St. Louis City and County has been a great disservice to the entire area for many years, and is a large part of the reason for the huge problems the city is facing now. 2. When Rivers of Life and Victory Fellowship became Southgate Church in 2008, we strongly felt that we should describe this as a "marriage," and that we should do all we could to make it work as a marriage. I was very encouraged by what I heard today. I believe that God is up to something.
